

Cry for Help

Computer Tips & Tricks for the novice to the advanced.

DIY Real Estate Research

For people interested in property, there are now more resources on the internet, not just realestate.com.au or going direct to a specific agent's web site.

Yahoo has information on properties for sale and rent, as well as sold and rented properties. They also have some mapping capabilities although when I entered postcode 3220 it gave me a map of Frankston. To have a go yourself... start at the Yahoo home page and click "Real estate" on the left hand list. Then enter your postcode in the search field and click on "Search"

Google also has information on properties for sale and rent, and the mapping capabilities are even better. To have a go yourself... start at the Google.com.au home page and click "Maps". Then click on "Show search options" to reveal a new pull down list, and on this, select "Real estate". Enter your postcode in the search field and click "Search Maps" to reveal the properties.

Both Yahoo and Google allow you to refine your search by number of bedrooms and bathrooms etc and are quite user friendly, so give them a go. I cannot make claim as to the accuracy of the information, but they will certainly help your research. Also, like any searching on the internet, never assume that you are looking at a complete list of all properties.

Jonathan Harris
JNH Software Pty Ltd
5259 2304

